What goes into building a house is pretty standard and can sometimes be rather dry. But what goes into making it a home—now that's a different story. With colors and fixtures, remodeling to fit your style, that's when you put your heart into it. The ideas are flowing and your dreams keep growing! Then reality sets in. How do you make your ideas come to life when you don't know the first thing about construction or remodeling, let alone design?

Call the experts: the founder of Curb Appeal Renovations Rob Mathews and wife Robin Burrill. They are in the business of making your house a home. Clients come to Curb Appeal Renovations with great ideas but often struggle with how to bring it all together. How do you execute this master plan you have created in your mind? The team illustrates what you are looking for to help you visualize your dream along the way. "There's more to Curb Appeal Renovations than just replacing a toilet in your bathroom or door somewhere in your house," said Rob. "We definitely do those things, but we take it further by coordinating the space with the whole house."

With Curb Appeal Renovations, you can expect a remodeling facelift like none other. They add that personal touch to every project. Remodeling affects every part of your house a little differently, and their objective is to bring it all together, completing the picture of your home. Their goal is to transform your space and create more of what Robin calls a "home to stay." As an interior designer, she helps design a space you never want to leave. Curb Appeal Renovations helps you refocus, rebuild and reenergize your home.

When you think of making a house a home, how many people actually say they plan to stay in their homes forever? A knee-jerk reaction is to think hardly any. According to Robin, most people actually say forever. "It's funny. When we ask our clients how long they plan to live in their homes, they often interrupt us with 'Forever!' and you laugh," she said. "But we are proud to say, we have a plan for forever." 🏡

Together with Ferguson Bath & Kitchen Gallery, they are pleased to announce the following classes:
